“Orchid-Scapes” Series

“If you are in the company of good people, it is like entering a room full of orchids. After a while, you become soaked in the fragrance and you don’t even notice it. If you are in the company of bad people, it is like going into a room that smells of fish. After a while, you don’t notice the fishy smell as you have been immersed in it.” -Confucius

The orchid’s fragrance was used to portray the sublimity of character which Confucius believed everyone should strive for and which formed the basis of his moral preaching, and to emphasize the influential power of people of such character.

“Vogue Orchids” Series

“The orchid grows where others cannot endure the hardships of hunger and thirst, and is loosely tied to the things that support it.

And, even with all the difficulty of its life, the orchid graces the world with beautiful colour and rare fragrance.

This is like the life of the true gentleman, who sets himself to learn self-discipline, and whose character shines no matter where he is or what he experiences.” -Confucius
